

Need a Pet Sitter? Choose The Right One Between House Sitting vs. Kennels

While it may be exciting for you to be away for a while, but your pets may find it extremely distressing because they might not understand completely that you are just going on vacation and will be back soon.

Therefore you should make sure that your pets are in a familiar setting that won't cause them any stress while you are away.

Boarding kennels and house pet sitting are the two most common options. This blog will discuss the advantages of pet sitting at a house and compare them to boarding kennels.

House Sitting vs. Kennels, The Difference

Most importantly, there is a significant distinction between House Sitting vs. Kennels. These kennel facilities are usually large structures with rows of close by cages and kennels, each one holding a dog. During their stay kennel employees are in charge of feeding, watering, and taking care to the dogs typically one employee is tasked with looking after ten pets. Dogs therefore wind up being locked up in a small area over the majority of the time. Dogs struggle to survive in this setting, which can cause serious stress and anxiety. It's an entirely different routine, setting, and group of people, which can be disturbing for them.

Most dogs prefer the comfort of staying with a pet sitter, while some can get used to kennels. Since many kennels only take dogs and you'll probably need to make separate arrangements if you have other pets. Regardless of how many pets you have, pet sitting takes place when you hire someone to come into your house and take care of them while you are away.

With pets at the House the pet sitters will visit your home to check in on walking and feeding the dog as well as perform an overall fitness check. They will also stay in your home for an entire night to take care of the pets and ensure their safety.

Finding a trustworthy house sitter can be simple and stress-free with ZoodleApp. In the convenience of your own home, it connects you with verified local pet sitters who offer individualized care for your pets.

Pets of all kinds, not just dogs, can benefit from this service, which lets them remain in their comfortable surroundings and continue with regard to their daily activities as usual until you get back.

What Makes a Pet House Sitting Better Over Kennels?

You must first understand your dog in order to determine which option is best for you. However we have found that most pets particularly dogs prefer to remain at home, and hiring a pet sitter is a great way to do this. Compared to kennels, hiring a pet sitter has many benefits including:

Friendliness: Pets of all sizes including dogs and cats are creatures of habit. They have a tendency to stick to what they know when their situation changes. It's crucial to make them feel at ease and relaxed because leaving home can cause a lot of disruption. Your pets will find it easier to adapt and cope when you are away because a pet sitter lets them remain in their own house where they are surrounded by known sounds and routines.

Personalized Home Care: Whether you have a small pet or a larger group of animals, house sitting offers a range of services tailored to meet their specific needs. If you're away at work during the day or out of town, pet sitters can make scheduled visits to ensure your pets are fed and cared for as needed.

They can also provide additional services such as dog walking or extended family care if you'll be away for a longer period. All staff members have passed background checks. So if you're planning a vacation or a business trip, and prefer not to leave your pets in a kennel but pet sitters offer a comforting and reliable alternative.

Advantages of Hiring a House Sitting vs. Kennels

Noiseless Environment:

Kennels are frequently noisy and chaotic. A kennel might not be the best environment for your dog if they have noise sensitivity or don't get along with other animals. House sitting provides a peaceful, quiet setting that spares your pet from the stress of a busy kennel and lets them remain in familiar surroundings.

Leaving pets behind can be stressful, especially in noisy kennels. House sitting keeps them safe in a familiar, peaceful home environment with personalized care and routine. With trusted sitters from ZoodleApp, your pets stay comfortable, relaxed, and well cared for while you're away. Read more

