How Much Is a Mommy Makeover With Breast Augmentation?

If you want implants as part of your plan, you've probably noticed that quotes jump quickly. So how much is a mommy makeover when breast augmentation is included? Usually thousands more than a makeover without it.

Why Implants Change the Price

Breast augmentation adds several costs at once:

- The implants themselves: silicone implants generally cost more than saline, and premium brands cost more again
- Extra surgeon time: the operation adds time in the operating room
- Longer anesthesia: more minutes under anesthesia means a higher fee

In the US, adding augmentation can push a full makeover past $20,000. Abroad, the same plan often lands between $6,000 and $12,000, depending on the destination.

Lift, Augmentation or Both?

Many mothers actually need a breast lift rather than implants, because the issue is sagging rather than lost volume. A lift costs less than implants, and combining a lift with implants costs the most. A good surgeon will tell you which option suits your anatomy instead of selling you the biggest package.

Questions to Ask Before You Book

1. Which implant brand and type is included in the quote?
2. Is there a warranty if something goes wrong with the implant?
3. Are revision surgeries covered, and for how long?
4. Who handles complications if I've already flown home?

Skipping these questions is how patients end up with surprise bills later.

Planning Your Budget

Add a cushion of 10 to 15 percent on top of your quote for medications, compression garments and anything unexpected. Platforms like CureMeAbroad can help you compare hospitals and what each package covers before you commit.
